

FARMERS CO-OPERATION.

The political results growing out of the farmer's convention at Ocala may or may not vanish like smoke. But that assembly originated one movement which, if faithfully followed up, will end in most substantial good to all the agriculturists engaged in it. This is the movement toward co-operative stores.

One state depot of the National Union company has already been established at Louisville. Thirty-five branch stores are to be founded elsewhere in Kentucky. The farmer's country organizations will select agents and place them in charge of the branch stores. There will remain one thing to insure the success of this movement to enable farmers to control their own purchases and secure them on advantageous terms. Talk will be that the agents of their choosing must be both honest and shrewd business men.

With the example of the great co-operative store system before them in England, the farmers cannot fail in their scheme if it is well managed. Members of the first English co-operative society put there means together and formed a joint stock company. At first they confined their work merely to buying articles at wholesale and distributing them among the members, adding to the price merely the expenses of distribution. Then a great vista opened before the co-operationists. They began a retail store of their own. They gave good, honest value in all that was sold, but the retail price was put slightly above the wholesale, though it was still below that charged by ordinary retail stores. Then at the end of a given time they divided the profits among the stockholders. Outsiders were allowed to purchase goods but had no share in the profits, which were reserved for members of the co-operative concern.

The plan above outlined has been the one which seemed to wear the best in Great Britain, where the system has now spread far and wide. With modifications such as the difference of country and people would demand, this appears to be the plan which would succeed best in America. The old scheme of Grange stores was a failure naturally. But now the agriculturists have gained experience. They will be benefactors of their fellow man if they can inaugurate successfully the system of co-operative stores in the United States, where all attempts to make it work on a large scale have hitherto failed. The fact that it has been so marvelous a success in England, however, shows that it can be brought to perfection. Honesty, patience and business shrewdness will perfect the plan, and will have opportunity to show that they can manage their own business without outside assistance.

What a ghastly scene that must have been in the death chamber of Dom Pedro, when in the presence of the dead ex-Emperor, and in the presence of an Empire that is just as dead, those in the room knelt and kissed the hand of the heir to the shattered throne in token of allegiance. That spectacle ought to make the occupant of every other throne an earth shudder. The rule has been on such occasions to say, "The King is dead, long live the King" or "Queen;" in this case the King was dead, but with it the Kingdom was dead likewise. And another notice was served on that group, and outside that chamber, on the world, that there is no such thing as hereditary royalty, except that royalty which comes of sovereign hearts and brains. It was a harmless ceremony, but it was a ghastly one all the same. Kissing the hand of a woman, and hailing her as sovereign in the presence of the dead body of him who has been Emperor, and in the presence of a Kingdom that is as dead as is the body of the ex-Emperor, was a playing with earthly forms after the reality of those forms had ceased to exist.

Seven people, (plain citizens) were killed in a railway accident in the East recently. No blame was attached to the engineer. Now, suppose seven superintendents or directors were killed; what a frightful mess the engineer would be in!

A mining convention is to be held in San Francisco on the 20th.
